

The Formentera Office of Social Welfare will host two lectures with the social educator Marina Marroquí on 31 March. The first, at 11.30am in the Sala de Cultura (Cinema), is 'That's not Love', a monologue/workshop aimed at training pupils in years three and up at Marc Ferrer Secondary School (IES Marc Ferrer) to spot and prevent gender violence.

Marina Marroquí will offer a humorous stock-taking of music, television, adverts and cinema and try to instil youth with an understanding of critical thinking and how we internalise romantic love in ways which are toxic. After that, she will tell her own story of gender violence –including how she relapsed, realised what was happening, got out and got through it– and shares insight about some of the early warning signs of gender violence.

Talk for families

The second talk on 31 March, part of the cycle Talks for Families (Xerrades per a Famílies), is entitled 'How do I raise my children to prevent them from suffering violence and being violent?'. Childcare will be offered while the talks are being held.
